Practical application clinics - Putting theory in to practise

Hart's Horsemanship always focuses on the education and learning of participants and a clinic or lecture demonstration can be an ideal way to introduce the practical application of the science of behaviour and training.

Participants benefit from seeing different horses being assessed, learning styles uncovered and individual training plans created and started.

As always they are taught in a fun relaxed manner that allows participants to ask questions throughout. You can take home what you learn and get started with your own horse, donkey or mule.

Clinics use 4-5 horses during the day to demonstrate the principles and application of the art and science of behaviour. Clinics can be tailor made to suit the needs of participants, who have every opportunity to participate and discuss the topic of the day. These days are a real opportunity to see a trainer walking the talk whilst making learning fun.

As with all my work the horse always comes first, so in these clinics the horses will only be asked to achieve what I feel they are capable of on that day. Therefore the structure of the day and it's content will depend entirely on the horses and owners used on the day.

Clinic days include;

Common Horse Training Myths Explored-The Practical Application - This day provides an opportunity to learn how a simple understanding of behaviour and learning can solve the challenges that you face as a horse owner.

Theory days

These are educational days looking at different aspects of equine behaviour run without horses, but in a fun interactive and lively way. Minimum of 10 maximum 40. £35-£45 10 am- 4pm

Horse sense and handling—Inside the equine mind

A day packed full of information to give us an insight into life through a horse's eyes (and ears!). Then how to apply this to horse handling skills with a chance to test your observation and behaviour skills by analysing video clips of horse behaviour in all different situations.

Looking at the horse human relationship from both points of view —“Putting what we know in to what we do”

Each of us bases our training on what we believe about how horses think and how this effects their behaviour. Understanding what the equine brain is really capable of will transform your understanding of your horse.

If you can't find what you are looking for from the list above and have ideas about what you want to learn and do then we can tailor make a day for you, just email with your requirements.

Lecture Demonstrations

These events offer an insight into the applications of the art and science of horsemanship. They are not based on showmanship or on spectacle but on learning and educating the viewer. Working with 2-3 horses to show how equine learning and behaviour really occurs and how anyone can use an understanding of behaviour to safely and effectively change the behaviour of horses, donkeys and mules.

These events are to demonstrate the true nature and potential of equines so that no matter what method of training the spectator uses they will leave with a greater understanding of equine learning and the opportunity to immediately develop their own potential safely and effectively.

At around three hours in length with opportunities to ask questions throughout, these events are for people prepared to learn and question themselves. There is no quick fix or method to sell, only learning to observe.

As always, lecture demonstrations are delivered in a way that makes learning good humoured and fun with plenty of audience discussion and questions. Suitable for 30 – 150 people.

If you are considering holding a lecture demonstration for your organisation or venue then please email to discuss the possibilities.
